Working on Final Product

This week was dedicated to working on my legal journal for Final Presentation. The main goals for this week were to catch up on my legal journal and write assessments for the mentor visits that have been completed thus far. This will allow me to get ahead on assessments and focus more time on Final Presentation since that will be coming up sooner than expected. It is also important to finish the articles of the legal journal so my mentor can go over the articles and make recommendations. Another goal for this week was to get feedback from my mentor on the first article and ask her a few questions that were still unclear after doing research. Overall, the majority of my goals were successful as my legal journal has progressed and more assessments have been completed.

Since last week was used as a break to recuperate, it was imperative that this last week's work ethic was very good. My work ethic was mainly successful because I set daily goals for writing my legal journal that allowed for blocks of time to work on the articles. Even then, my work ethic could have been better in the sense that writing has been going at a slow pace. In order to have the legal journal completed for Final Presentation night, my focus will have to shift towards working quicker through the articles. This will require not spending too much time on researching, and instead, begin writing the article while researching along the way for any questions that are left unanswered. While my writing was not at the desired pace, my time was spent appropriately and managed efficiently.

This week's goals will be pretty similar to last week's goals as the main goal will still be directed towards working on my legal journal. However, this week will focus on doing research for the second article of the issue. Another goal of this week will be to put together some of the small parts needed for Final Presentation that need to be completed, but will not hinder the development of my legal journal since they will take much less time. As Final Presentation approaches, it will be important to remain focused and complete my goals week by week so my work does not fall behind.
