

Weekly Report 14

12/2 - 12/9

Legal Journal

This week was dedicated mostly to contacting professionals and working on my legal journal. The main goals for the week related to the original work as progress has not gone as quickly as expected. It has been especially difficult to find topics to write about, but this issue of the legal journal should not have too many more articles. After picking the topic for what will most likely be the last article of this issue, it has been easier to do research and edit past articles. In addition, another goal that was successfully completed was getting an interview at the District Attorney's office with a Chief Felony Prosecutor. If this interview goes well, it would provide a great opportunity to obtain a mentorship.

My time management this week was pretty good, but it has been hard to get work done on my original work since there are no deadlines due at the end of each week. In order to get more work completed, I will set week end goals that will dictate my original work progress. For the upcoming week, the final article needs to be completed by Sunday night as well as rereading and editing article one. After finishing this final article, it will leave time to edit and shorten the first four articles to then determine if a fifth article is needed to complete the journal.

This upcoming week will be dedicated to working on the original work and preparing for the interview on Monday. Doing thorough research is one of the most important parts of my legal journal so the beginning of the week will be dedicated to researching rather than writing. Once a good foundation has been established, the latter part of the week can be spent writing the article. The goal for next week is to have a successful interview and hopefully have a professional that is willing to mentor me.
